

Commonwealth back to 1960. They are being analyzed. The material will go to the committee. We will continue to methodically plod along and we will bring to this body at the appropriate times the reports regarding failings. However, the reason that the committee had to take a detour to deal with the Attorney General is because the Attorney General was being dealt with both publicly through the news media and publicly through the investigations of David Domina and John Miller. And given the suspicion created about the Attorney General and given the responsibilities of the Legislature to deal with official misconduct, it fell our unhappy lot in life to take the detour to look at the Attorney General to see what was what, and it also fell our unhappy lot in life to have to pass judgment. But you can rest assured that the committee will keep on trucking, it will carry out its responsibilities in accordance with the resolution adopted by this body, notwithstanding what happens today because the committee undertakes its responsibilities very seriously. Secondly, should you support this resolution or the impeachment resolution, I guarantee you they are not mutually exclusive. You may vote this resolution, you may vote the impeachment resolution. They are not mutually exclusive because they deal with the very same set of facts. They are not mutually exclusive. You may vote against both if that be your desire. But you can vote for both, you can vote for one or the other, but you do not have to decide condemnation as opposed to impeachment. You are simply passing on a set of facts. You are bringing to it your own reason decision powers. You are passing judgment and you are supporting this resolution if you wish to do that and you can support the next resolution if you wish to do that. They are not mutually exclusive. You know this whole story today is one of duty, it is one of duty. It is the story of a public officeholder, Paul Douglas, having a duty and the duty was fair, faithful, loyal, devoted representation of the state.

PRESIDENT: One minute.

SENATOR V. JOHNSON: The Attorney General failed in his duty because he was being pulled by an outside transaction. For several years he had financial, legal and business
